Many people take a more balanced perspective. They acknowledge that gaining subscribers is a legitimate goal for content creators, but they also emphasize the importance of creating high-quality, meaningful content. They may appreciate channels that provide tips on both content creation and audience growth.

Especially during times when travel may be limited, these channels offer a way for viewers to "travel" vicariously and virtually explore destinations they may not have the chance to visit in person.

Viewers who share an interest in global exploration can connect with like-minded individuals in the channel's community, sharing travel tips, experiences, and recommendations.

Says

Beyond education, these channels can also be entertaining. Engaging storytelling, beautiful cinematography, and unique adventures can captivate audiences and keep them coming back for more.

There are those who are critical of channels that promote unethical or spammy tactics for gaining subscribers, such as sub4sub schemes or clickbait strategies. Such tactics can lead to short-term gains but often result in a less engaged and less loyal audience in the long run.

Many content creators, especially those who are just starting, find subscriber-focused channels valuable. They often appreciate tips, strategies, and insights shared by these channels. Such content can help them understand how to grow their audience and navigate the complexities of YouTube's algorithm.
